

Problem Statement

Twitter has too many spam accounts and free speech on the platform is too limited

Details:

Twitter faces two significant issues, which is the prevalence of spam accounts and limitations on free speech. Spam accounts, often automated bots, flood the platform with misleading information, unsolicited promotions, and fake engagement, diminishing the quality of user interactions and overwhelming legitimate content. This compromises trust and authenticity on the platform. On the other hand, Twitter's policies on free speech have sparked debate, with some users feeling that certain viewpoints are unfairly censored or restricted, while others argue that the platform struggles to manage harmful or hateful content. Balancing open expression with the need to curb abuse remains a persistent challenge for Twitter.
